

HDV 368- Diversity and Social Justice. The course applies social construction and developmental frameworks such as bio-ecological theory to examine issues of diversity across the lifespan and in the practice of Human Development. The course includes, but is not limited to the critical discourses on; historical and current events in the US and Italy, contributing factors at an individual, community, and institutional level, and impact on lived experiences of citizens. Overall, this course will equip students with the knowledge that they can apply in their personal and professional lives as they navigate through an increasingly globalized world.
